VU HOSTS PROSTHETIC ENGINEERING CAMP WITH BIONIC P&O

What does it take to build a prosthesis? A group of talented High school students who are interested in engineering found out this summer, through a partnership between Valparaiso University and Bionic.

Teams of students competed to build a body-powered arm prosthesis based on the unique needs presented by case studies of patients, and then participated in a series of challenges to test their devices' functionalities, judged by a panel that included Tony Gutierrez and a Bionic patient.

Staff at VU hope that this and similar camps will help to spark a lifelong love of engineering and perhaps spark an interest in the field of prosthetics for these talented and passionate students.
